OceanGate was initiated by Guillermo Söhnlein and Stockton Rush in Seattle in 2009. According to Söhnlein, the company was founded with the intention of creating a small fleet of 5-person commercial submersibles that could be leased by any organization or group of individuals.

Who they Are?

On June 21, it was announced that OceanGate's Everett office was closed indefinitely, and on July 6, OceanGate suspended all operations. Since August 2023, Gordon Gardiner has been the company's CEO. Until official investigations and the company's shutdown is completed, the company is out of business.

TITAN

Equipped with a toilet, cameras, controls and sonar screens

Thrusters

Pressure vessel: carbon fibre and titanium

Viewport

Titan's carbon-fiber walls are 5 inches (13 cm) thick, and the vessel is capped at each end with titanium domes

It is launched from a small platform that can be carried out to sea aboard a commercial ship and submerged a few dozen meters below the surface.

Once passengers are inside, the hatch is bolted shut. Passengers generally sit on the floor, leaning their backs against a curved wall.

Mission

Years before OceanGate's submersible craft went missing in the Atlantic Ocean with five people onboard, the company faced several warnings as it prepared for its hallmark mission of taking wealthy passengers to tour the Titanic's wreckage.20-Jun-2023

Pakistani investor Shahzada Dawood and his son Suleman, British businessman Hamish Harding, French diver Paul-Henri Nargeolet and OceanGate CEO Stockton Rush were the victims aboard the deep-water vessel when the incident occurred.

Community and knowledge of this group is incredible!

“Some industry experts said OceanGate’s operations were known to be risky.”

it spent a total of 50 days floating above the shipwreck site, but because of waves, bad weather and malfunctions, the Titan submersible actually made it to the Titanic only 12 times.
